

Hitler Faces Greatest, Most Fateful Gamble As Hour Of Reckoning Nears

take credit bombing punishment—but they never anticipated Hitler's defense to be crippled out in half as Berlin had hoped. That was strategy in the grand style. More than anything else, it made it impossible for the Nazis to invade Britain.

Later on, a high-placed officer of the Royal Air Force gave me a frank confirmation of the essence of this declaration.

Somewhere, in my recent war-filings, I also encountered a foreign military authority who had been in Germany a long time. He said:

"The Germans tried a September invasion. They had prepared for it for weeks in the coastal ports and they even shored some of the islands what they were doing. Hundreds of barges, packed with thousands of Nazi troops, were sunk in Dutch, Belgian, or French ports."

EVERY BODY A HIT

Somewhere, an R.A.F. officer described to me how he had flown over ports jammed tight with barges and convoys, and how every bomb had to be a hit.

The words of these witnesses had the ring of authenticity. On the other hand, if the Germans suffered a very considerable disaster of this kind, I don't pretend to know why the British government did not make publicity out of it at the time. What is certainly far more important and much more convincing is the fact that Nazi air over the British spent the summer telling us they would be in London in September, and then suddenly carefully avoided that subject when autumn came. Hitler did not invade the British Isles. It was his greatest chance. But he didn't do it because he couldn't pull it off. It seems impossible to see this conclusion.

With these elements for background, what about Hitler's alternative today?

Admittedly, there remain only a few places in Europe where Nazi Germany might move. It can move in the following directions:

- 1—Straight ahead and all out against the British Isles.
- 2—Against Greece, Yugoslavia, Turkey.
- 3—Into Spain and Portugal as preparation for an attack upon the British Isles.
- 4—Into the Ukraine "bread-basket" and the Bakui oil fields of Soviet Russia.

Regarding the first alternative, there can be no doubt that Nazi Germany, having failed to invade Britain last autumn, must make a powerful attempt to do so some time during these next few months. Hitler ever expects to occupy the British Isles before they become forbiddingly, perhaps hopelessly strong. It would seem that Nazi must strike there this spring, preferably before July. For Britain's defensive and offensive powers are increasing every week. Just as they have weekly since September and the flow of American war materials will make an enormous difference by midsummer. Hitler knows two things very well: that he cannot win or survive a long war, and that he cannot keep across the continent unless he breaks out Great Britain.

HAD HAND FORCED

But to launch the greatest invasion attempt against Britain since the Spanish Armada, Hitler will need to use every weapon at his command. He must have quiet behind his back and an uninterrupted flow of war materials and munitions from Hungary, Rumania, Russia, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia. This is why Hitler has had to move into Bulgaria, put pressure on the Yugoslavs and take great risks to impose a dictated peace upon the Greeks. He may possibly succeed in all this (it never seems to me probable that those granite-hearted Germans. Nevertheless, it still looks like Hitler has had his hand forced. He never wanted to risk a paralyzing blundering move in southeastern Europe and he has been compelled to move with desperate speed.

So Hitler is trying posthaste to close the back door to the Balkans. Without venturing upon rash forecasts, let us consider certain possibilities.

HEAVY DRAIN

Suppose the Greeks had to resist themselves and the Nazis get control of Salonika, with or without armed intervention. Anything like that would be the worst that could happen to the gallant Greeks. In such a case Hitler would presumably have his hands free once more to turn west against Britain. His armies of occupation throughout eastern and southeastern Europe, however, would probably exceed 2,000,000 men, if they do not surpass that total already. The figures upon the spread out Nazi war machine would be greater than ever, especially since scores of divisions must also plant their roots in those of Turkey.

It would be folly for Hitler to try to vent the Dardanelles from the Turks right now, though of course he intends to grab these strategic points some day. It is quite possible that he will be able to do that before the year ends. But without a naval control of the Mediterranean, possession of the Dardanelles would not appreciably advance Germany war potentialities. Their seizure would also cost plenty of money, if Hitler is going to strike in the west.

We hear much speculation about the Nazi army striking through Turkey, crossing Syria, invading Palestine, and so smashing down upon the Suez Canal by land. For a long while to come, by land constitutes about the only chance the Germans would have of reaching the Near. But several factors are overlooked in this popular speculation. First, it seems absolutely certain that the Turks will fight if they are attacked—and extremely probable that the Soviets will encourage them to resist, perhaps supplying them with war materials. Second, there can be no blitzkrieg across Turkish Asia Minor.

Some of the shrewdest military experts in the Balkans insist that a German attempt to drive through Turkey's Taurus mountains would be "military folly." They point out that only one strategic road traverses this wild region. It would require 35 teams to transport one German division and its equipment across Turkish Asia Minor—of about 15,000 men—this

If the Turks make an intransigent attitude, the Nazis would surely dynamite across of bridges and tunnels, and then they would be left with a very serious and unsolvable problem. It is conceivable that the Nazis could reach Syria and Palestine through the Turkish desert, but it is equally conceivable that the Turks would not let them. If they failed in that, they would still be fighting against the British in the Near East. The Turks are the only Balkan peoples who have usually fought about expelling Nazi agents ever since the war began. Although it seems extremely unlikely that Hitler would take on the Turks before he has won a decisive blow against Britain.

THIRD ALTERNATIVE

That brings us to Hitler's third alternative, passage of troops through Spain to Gibraltar, and possible occupation of Portugal. Certain military analysts in the Balkans, who have been close to the Nazis for months, insist that Germany must choke off the Gibraltar port from the British before attempting an invasion. In their opinion, this would mean Nazi occupation of all Spanish Atlantic ports and also occupation of Lisbon and of Portugal's important port of Lagos, down near Gibraltar. In Lisbon, on my way home, Portuguese expressed a great deal of concern about what might happen. Many Portuguese are obsessed with fear that this is going to happen.

Last October, one of Field Marshal Hermann Goering's private advisers had a long talk with a friendly journalist in a Balkan resort. He said that if the Germans may control the entire Atlantic coast from Dakar to the way far down to Dakar in French West Africa, that Germany must control all the coastline along the Atlantic coast from the English-Saxon world. About that time I caught up with a military attaché who had been 100 per cent right in predicting exactly what Germany arms did in Holland, Belgium and France. He is probably the only one of the German military policy and plans of anywhere in the Balkans. He was regularly convinced that Hitler must seize the base in Spain, Portugal and out of Gibraltar as completely as possible before attacking the British Isles. The attaché said, "We have to knock out Britain before American aid can get in. He believed Hitler would smash at simultaneously, and "push the little empire later." If he succeeded, the September 1941 would be a more notably cautious about making outright predictions about the outcome.

From indirect Nazi sources and from knowledge of Hitler's strategy, it is possible, therefore, to build up a strong case for a German move into Spain and Portugal, and this as a final step preparatory to blitzkrieging over the English channel.

Against this possibility, or probability, several factors can be ranged. Such as France's demonstrated aversion to becoming involved in the world war. Such as the inflamed opposition and resentment which the Spanish people would feel toward a German army of occupation. Most important of all, such as the cruel fact that Spain today is the most starved nation in Europe and millions of Spaniards can only be kept alive as long as Britain and the Americas send them enough food to keep them from starving. If the Nazis go in, these absolutely essential food supplies will stop. Over Spain's disorganized, war-wrecked railways Hitler would also have a terrific job trying to ship in sufficient food and war materials for even two or three German divisions in the south of Spain.

HIGH GAMBLE

Perhaps Hitler would merely demand transit facilities, as that he could say. It might be that. But Nazi occupation forces might manage to live in Portugal limited for a short time. It would be quite a big gamble, yet Hitler may have to take it, especially if he feels it is necessary for Germany to use Portuguese ports against both Gibraltar and the British Isles. If Hitler has certain doubts about the possibility of invading Britain—something which the evidence indicates he must be arguing with to a considerable degree—then a possible Nazi move on the Iberian Peninsula is not so discounted during the coming months. Should it be taken, however, it can only be an engaged in by the face of serious handicaps and risks.

As a fourth alternative, one question remains: Will Hitler invade some portion of Soviet Russia? In December, Hitler's advisers were divided. Some believed that such an attack was unwise, and others believed that it might happen before the year ends. The odds are in favor of a probability today—unless Hitler should find that he had abandoned this idea. But that does not mean that Germany has given up the idea of attacking the Red army some day.

FEEDING PROBLEM

In a previous article I have discussed Stalin's justified fear and the reasons for them in considering Russia. One of two main elements may be pertinent here. With Nazi occupation of the Low Countries and much of France, the problem of feeding Hitler's "hunger peoples" has become stupendous. Since the Nazis have taken Italy, the Nazis must ship large quantities of gasoline into Italy. If they do, they will be in a position to supply the German army with gasoline. With every gallon of gasoline, Germany increases the supply lines and supplies increase.

This is why and how Hitler's armed forces are handicapped by every kind of need. It is a chain. In particular, Germany's supply lines are very hard pressed for bread. In the Balkans, it is also stated that the Nazis are faced with a serious shortage of heavy lubricating oil. The Nazis are also faced with a serious shortage of heavy lubricating oil. The Nazis are also faced with a serious shortage of heavy lubricating oil. The Nazis are also faced with a serious shortage of heavy lubricating oil.

Regarding alternative of the Nazis making provision for the delivery of food to the British Isles, it is not possible to say whether the British Isles will be able to sustain the Nazis. The British Isles will be able to sustain the Nazis. The British Isles will be able to sustain the Nazis.

OBSCURE SURVEY

This is an objective survey and as close an estimate as my 11 months in all corners of Europe at my own pace can make. From such a survey, I feel, I think, stands out very clearly that Hitler has no all-out invasion of Great Britain. Hitler has extremely few alternatives. He can only hope to do so that he must deal Hitler a mortal blow. He can only hope to do so that he must deal Hitler a mortal blow. He can only hope to do so that he must deal Hitler a mortal blow.

Suppose, for a moment, that Hitler throws all against the British Isles, yet fails to strike a decisive blow. Then he would have the only two of three remaining alternatives he would be compelled to act violently somewhat, or, as an alternative, would be fraught with extremely grave dangers of overpopulation. Hitler might very well conquer the Ukraine and shatter Stalinism and still lose the war. Even a perfect army of 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 men cannot spread too thinly across all of Europe and parts of western Asia.

For Hitler the hour of decision is close at hand, but the clock-hand of fate is not yet pointing to a strike close behind. Without underestimating for a moment how closely the balance wheel in the east may hang, it would be a great error to overlook the fact that this fact. For Hitler, in the great and most fateful gamble of many centuries, liberty of action is running dangerously low. Hitler has already lost the war. He has already lost the war. He has already lost the war.

admitted, pointed out that there was a disparity in freight rates. For instance, he said, a farmer in the south would have to pay an 18-cent freight rate to ship a bushel of wheat to a mill in the north, while a farmer in the north would have to pay a 29-cent freight rate to ship a bushel of wheat to a mill in the south. He said that the price he set at the shipping point instead of at Fort William.

Supporting a claim in the resolution that the wheat board had collected he remarked to ask in the operation of the wheat board that the tax was levied on all of farmers having wheat processed for home use, and that it was levied on all of farmers having wheat processed for export. He said that the tax was levied on all of farmers having wheat processed for export. He said that the tax was levied on all of farmers having wheat processed for export.

DELIVERY QUOTAS

Mr. MacMillan declared that he was satisfied there must be some method of quota delivery to wheat. He said it was not proper to let the wheat board decide the wheat board should have been handling last year's crop and should know the production and therefore it was thought that no definite suggestion could be made at this time.

Package for package Sweet Caps are your best cigarette buy

LET'S TALK FACTS:

If you're not an expert, it's easy to be misled. Any brand of cigarettes may claim "mildness, fragrance," or a hundred other things. The fact is that Sweet Caps do claim, and can justify their claim, to be made from 38 classifications of the choicest Virginia tobaccos blended according to the famous Sweet Caporal formula.

But the proof that, package for package, Sweet Caps do give more pleasure for your money is that Canadians, free to choose, smoke more Sweet Caps than any other brand. In cigarettes, as in everything else, you get just what you pay for.

Very Much "Here"

Last week's raid on the Lofoden Islands was a fitting prelude to the official announcement that 400 warships were added to the fleet of Britain. These small vessels will be small consolation to the enemy that most of these new ships are of the "midget" class, destroyers, submarines, and patrol vessels. These small swift craft are precisely the types to combat submarines and air raiders, raid enemy-held ports, round up enemy merchant vessels and convoy friendly merchantmen; while there are enough big fellows to take care of the "monster" battleships and the warships of the battleship and cruiser classes.

Despite losses, "The Navy's here," in larger numbers than when the war began; and with a fresh series of amazing victories to attest its quality and inspire it to future enterprise.

Less Need To Shudder

Now that the debating is over, it would be interesting to know how many people in the United States feel that the war in this country is nearer to war because it is going to supply arms and ammunition to Britain and other democracies which are holding the front line of defense. There is a great deal of idle of free government versus autocracy.

Britain and its fighting Allies stand, what country or combination of countries is in position to launch war against the United States? But they were defeated. It would be obvious to every reader of this Republic who can see beyond his own borders that the victorious Axis powers were equipped to launch the closing of the war as no combination has ever had, while the United States would stand alone and alone attack it, when and how the Axis chiefs must choose.

Senator Wheeler and his associates say they intend to stamp the country on their backs of appeasement and aloofness. They are likely to find the going hard, and getting grayer harder.

There can be only a small minority of people in the United States who do not feel already a sense of security they never could have while they faced the possibility of an air victory. Fewer still know that they are actually less secure because their Government is to see that its friends abroad do not make a mistake.

The Vichy Warships

A Vichy dispatch quotes Admiral Darlan as saying he will use French warships to convoy food ships to French ports "if necessary," it would not be necessary to add for "several weeks," if ever. The Admiral is further credited with saying the blockade of the continent is not harming Germany, but that people who are not participating in the war.

This story in all essential details was brought from British (and French) sources before Admiral Darlan gave out his statement; and was denied by an official spokesman at Vichy. Berlin, it appears, knew Darlan's message was denied, but it is not clear whether it was Berlin's way of telling him he was to say.

Darlan says is one thing, and what Britain decides may be something different. Faval tried to buy the ship at Vichy and was told he was not to be allowed to import food to Germany. It will be time for him to talk about force when he has tried peaceful means and failed. As for the effectiveness of the blockade as a measure of war, it has not been asked, and it is certainly not likely to be accepted as being either valuable or unprejudiced.

Nothing would better suit the purposes of Hitler than an open treaty between Vichy and Britain, which would almost certainly follow the blockade-running enterprise suggested. The account for Admiral Darlan's reputed views on the matter.

"Blitz"-ing Against Time

Opponents of the lease-lend bill in the Senate at Washington gave up the fight on Tuesday, exacting the price of a vote to certain in a matter of hours. Saturday night the Luftwaffe resumed the all-out indiscriminate bombing of London, in the most fearful it has ever conducted, but that the war was more than coincidence. This renewed frightfulness was the direct result of the failure of the Luftwaffe to appear and appears to frighten the Senate and the British plan to send "ships, tanks, guns, and aircraft" to Britain, and to be met by the "Hitler's" response to the declaration of United States' backing for the democracies be plans to destroy.

It would not help the bill if the Senate seemed to have a chance to settle the bill, the "Hitler" war on Britain was modified. It would not help the bill if the Senate seemed to have a chance to settle the bill, the "Hitler" war on Britain was modified. United States and the people of the United States were to read that they slept hundreds of women and children and aged people in London had been killed or maimed by Nazi armies. When passage of the bill became certain, the baby-killing jets left off their lethal and civilian slaughter started again full scale.

But this was something more than a ploy; it was a direct attack on the bill and the Senate. It was the Fuehrer's way of admitting that the lease-lend bill is a new and fearful obstacle in his path to world domination. Here, where he is seen as vocalizing a hope that the flood of new

Hitler hesitates to attack Greece until he has some assurance that Turkey will not assist her Hellenic neighbor. With tremendous forces guarding his conquered territories (two and a half million Nazi troops are in France alone), Hitler seems to be thinking twice before invading a country that might call to her assistance, not only an unknown number of British troops, but two million fighting Turks as well.

Turkey hesitates to give any specific assurances until she knows what Russia will do.

Russia seems determined to bluff and stand by until Hitler makes the first move. It looks very much as though neither Turkey nor Russia will interfere in the Balkan situation until or after their own territories are violated.

This is probably Hitler's opinion; but he cannot afford to take a chance on it. Beyond that, Hitler has the first move. It looks very much as though neither Turkey nor Russia will interfere in the Balkan situation until or after their own territories are violated.

The fact that Russia has massed troops along the Romanian frontier has an important bearing on Turkey's move. The Dardanelles seems to prove that Stalin must fear what this column foretold as a possibility after four days ago—a German invasion of the Ukraine.

The reports from Europe are strangely barren of definite Yugoslavian news.

It is a fair assumption that there is not a sure one, that Yugoslavia has managed to wriggle out of the Nazi embrace. Whether or not she can finally escape, she will at least have the credit for valiantly resisting and having been able to hold out for so long.

That Yugoslavia should have taken a stand apart from the Bulgarian and Rumanian lines is surprising. It is surprising that she has been acquainted with the circumstances of Balkan history.
